FACULTY POSITION
COMMUNITY AND SOCIAL DEVELOPMENT

The Mandel School of Applied Social Sciences at Case Western Reserve University invites applications and nominations for a tenure-track faculty position in Community and Social Development. Applicants should have a demonstrated commitment to social and economic justice and at-risk, vulnerable populations.

Applicants must have an earned doctorate in social work, development studies, urban planning, public policy, economics, public health, sociology or a related field. A Master's degree in social work is preferred, though not required. A scholarly and academic record for an appointment on the tenure-track is required. Appointment will be at a rank commensurate with experience. Successful candidates will have the capacity to continue a program of research and scholarship. Candidates with international experience are preferred. Women and People of Color are strongly encouraged to apply.

The Mandel School of Applied Social Sciences enrolls approximately 350 Master's degree students in social work and 60 Ph.D. students in social welfare. Future strategic directions include significantly increasing the number of students with an interest in the fields of community and social development. Using an innovative curriculum and assessment approach, the Master's program helps students develop the abilities they need for innovative, interdisciplinary, community-based practice. The doctoral program in social welfare, one of the first in the country, typically accepts between 9-12 students per year and has both a summer study and full-time program.

The School maintains strong ties with the practice community and has externally funded research and training programs in community and social development, mental health and substance abuse, poverty and its related consequences, child welfare, school social work, and aging. In the area of Community Development, the School has external funding for fellowships for Students of Color with leadership potential in the field. Collaborative ventures are encouraged and supported.

Application should include (1) a letter describing the applicant's research and teaching interests, (2) a curriculum vitae, and (3) samples of written work.
